In today's world, businesses are shaped by complexity, fast-changing conditions, and constant development. The organizations are trying to respond to dynamic developments and complexity, striving to achieve stability and to carry out operations more efficiently. In this dynamic world, we create new theories and new concepts such as supply chain management. What are the criteria for the new theories, and how are new conceptions related to them? With the advancement of Information technology, the information flow is so fast that the moment it is created, it travels instantaneously across all channels and decisions taken in no time. On one hand if there are challenges, on the other there are opportunities also for Supply Chain Professionals

Indian Railways Institute of Logistics and Materials Management (IRILMM), was formed in 1997 for imparting training in public procurement. The institute is regularly conducting seminars on sensitive issues of public procurement. Sensing the urgent need for improving the skills, our institute has developed a module on Supply Chain Management for officers/managers involved at various stages of supply chain.
